INTRODUCTION.

No effort seems to have been made to keep a history of Congress, or a directory of its Members, prior to 1820. In that year the first publication approaching the dignity of a congressional directory appeared, compiled and printed by "Daniel Rapine, Agent." It is a small volume of some forty pages and contains the names of the Members of Congress, with home and Washington addresses; the assignments of Members to committees; the names and local addresses of the heads of the executive departments; an imperfect list of American ministers in foreign countries, and an alphabetical list of Washington boarding houses. This publication with others similar appeared from time to time, as the succeeding sessions of Congress were held. They were purely private enterprises and depended upon sales and advertisements for their existence.

In 1865 Congress undertook the work of publishing a Congressional Directory. At the beginning of the second session of the Thirty-eighth Congress a joint resolution was unanimously agreed to ordering the compilation and publication of such directory, under the supervision of the Joint Committee on Public Printing. The committee held numerous sessions, obtained and examined like publications issued in foreign countries, and decided upon a work similar in all essentials to "The House of Commons," published in London since 1852.

Biographical sketches first appeared in the Directory of the third session of the Fortieth Congress, in 1869. Their scope and purpose are outlined in a prefatory note that reads in part: "The Joint Committee on Printing suggests that in the biographies published no other information shall be given than the full name, the time and place of birth of the Member; his early education; collegiate education, if any, with date of graduation; professional studies; profession or business; all public offices held, with dates, and the record of his congressional service," and then adds: "It is desirable that no gentleman shall occupy over ten lines in print."

The work of preparing and publishing a permanent congressional directory, to comprehend all the Congresses preceding, was first undertaken by Charles Lanman in 1859, and it bears the imposing title " Dictionary of the United States Congress." Too great credit can not be given Mr. Lanman for his work, considering the time and the small amount of material obtainable from official records and published proceedings. There have been at least six subsequent editions of this work, all calculated to bring it down to date. Since Mr. Lanman's last volume the succeeding compilers appear to have done little more than to add to the permanent volume such information as could be obtained from the periodical Congressional Directories. There seems to have been little effort to correct, revise, or perfect the work of the earlier compilers, and thus endless errors crept in.

The present committee has undertaken the work of general revision and verification. It has not only carefully scanned the journals and records of debates but it has also consulted all available biographical works; has made special appeals to Government depositories; public libraries; historical associations; State, county, and municipal officers, as well as to individuals, for specific and general information.

Acknowledgments are here made to all those who have assisted the committee in its work, and too great recognition can not be given the postmasters throughout the country, who, when appealed to for information, have invariably responded by furnishing the desired data, or by placing the committee in communication with some one most likely to possess it. There are instances in which librarians, historians, and biographers have spent many days in research and in preparation of facts desired, but to mention names would be invidious. The cooperation of all readers is further solicited to the end that the publication may eventually be a full and accurate record—a book of absolute and permanent value.

The history of the executive administrations has been examined, and verified from the official documents on file in the State Department, and special acknowledgments are made to Philander C. Knox, the Secretary of State, for his courteous cooperation in this work.

It has been the aim of the committee to be absolutely impartial in its presentations and to keep well within the bounds prescribed by the Joint Committee on Printing that first undertook the task. It is unfortunate that some records that might be of great value, especially as bearing upon earlier contested election cases and their determination, were burned by the British in 1814, and that the journals of the two Houses, and the certificates of election as well, are not reliable authority as to the spelling of names. They afford little accurate history as to resignations and deaths of Members, and none whatever as to their home addresses.

So far as it has been obtainable the post-office address of the Member during the period of his service is placed opposite his name in the Congress or Congresses in which he served.

Beginning with the Fortieth Congress, the names of Representatives from the various States are placed in the numerical order of the congressional districts they represented, and the names of any Representatives at large appear at the end of the list, in the order of their seniority. It will thus be easy, taking into account any footnote references of deaths, resignations, etc., to ascertain the particular congressional district a Member represented. The names of all Senators are given in the order of seniority, the name of the Senator of the longer service in the left-hand column and of the junior Senator in the right-hand column.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December, 1912.

EXECUTIVE OFFICERS.

EXECUTIVE OFFICERS, 1789–1911.

A Cabinet officer is not appointed for a fixed term and does not necessarily go out of office with the President who appointed him, and, while it is customary to tender his resignation at the time a change of administration takes place, he remains formally at the head of his department until his successor qualifies or he is himself reappointed. Subordinates acting temporarily as heads of departments are not considered Cabinet officers, and in the earlier period of the Nation's history not all Cabinet officers were heads of executive departments. The order of departmental precedence now observed was not followed prior to the passage of the act of January 19, 1886, establishing the line of presidential succession. The names of all those exercising the duties and bearing the responsibilities of the executive departments, together with the period of service, are incorporated in the data that follows. The Department of State, through the courtesy of Mr. Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State, has verified and corrected the data from official records and documents on file in the department.

The dates immediately following the names of executive officers are those upon which commissions issued, unless otherwise specifically noted. Where periods of time are indicated by dates as, for instance, March 4, 1793–March 3, 1797, both such dates are included as portions of the time period.

[1] Neither a quorum of the Senate nor of the House of Representatives appeared in their respective chambers on Wednesday, March 4, 1789. But eight Senators appeared and the minority adjourned from day to day until Monday, April 6, when a quorum of the Senate was first present. Thirteen members of the House of Representatives appeared on March 4 and a quorum was not present until April 1, when the body proceeded to the transaction of business. When both Houses were organized, on April 6, they met in joint convention, in the hall of the Senate, and proceeded to open and count the electoral vote for President and Vice-President. John Adams, the Vice-President-elect, appeared in the Senate Chamber and assumed the duties of the chair on Tuesday, April 21, 1789.

[2] Elected April 6, 1789.

[3] Elected April 8, 1789.

[4] On May 15, 1789, the Senate determined by lot the classes into which the membership should be divided agreeably to paragraph 2, section 3, of Article I of the Constitution, as follows: Class 1, whose terms should expire March 3, 1791—Messrs. Carroll, Dalton, Ellsworth, Elmer, Maclay, Read, and Grayson; class 2, whose terms should expire March 3, 1793—Messrs. Bassett, Butler, Few, Lee, Strong, Paterson, and Wingate; class 3, whose terms should expire March 3, 1795—Messrs. Gunn, Henry, Johnson, Izard, Langdon, and Morris.

[1] Resigned August 14, 1790.
[2] Resigned March 2, 1790, having been elected governor.
[3] Elected to fill vacancy in term ending March 3, 1793, caused by resignation of William Paterson, and took his seat December 6, 1790.
[4] The election of all four representatives was contested, but owing to the burning of the papers and documents from the First to the Sixth Congress, by the British in 1814, it is not possible to ascertain the grounds upon which the contest was based. It is known that it related to questions of regularity and procedure, and that the decision was favorable to the sitting Members.
[5] Took his seat July 25, 1789; term to expire, as determined by lot, March 3, 1795.
[6] Took his seat July 27, 1789; term to expire as determined by lot, March 3, 1791.

[1] Resigned in 1828.
[2] Elected to fill vacancy caused by resignation of William Haile, and took his seat December 8, 1828.
[3] A remonstrance against the legality of his election was considered by a select committee of five Senators; it revealed that, as chairman of the joint convention of the general assembly of New Jersey, Mr. Bateman had voted for himself for Senator, had broken a tie vote thereby, and upon such state of facts the certificate had been issued to him; May 22, 1828, the committee reported, holding that he had only exercised a legal right by thus voting, and, upon its request, was discharged; resigned January 12, 1829.
[4] Resigned January 30, 1829; subsequently elected to fill vacancy caused by resignation of Ephraim Bateman, and took his seat February 9, 1829. State unrepresented in this class from January 30, 1829, to March 3, 1829.
[5] Died January 14, 1828.
[6] Elected to fill vacancy caused by death of George Holcombe, and took his seat December 1, 1828.
[7] Died July 23, 1828.
[8] Elected to fill vacancy caused by death of Hedge Thompson, and took his seat December 1, 1828.

[1] Admitted as a State into the Union March 3, 1845.

[2] Took his seat December 1, 1845; term to expire, as determined by lot, March 3, 1851. On January 12, 1846, the Senate ordered the surname of Yulee to be added to the name of the Senator (David Levy Yulee), in conformity with an act of the Legislature of Florida.

[3] Took his seat December 1, 1845; term to expire, as determined by lot, March 3, 1849.

[4] Served until January 24, 1846; succeeded by William H. Brockenbrough, who contested his election.

[5] Successfully contested the election of Edward C. Cabell, and took his seat January 24, 1846.

[6] Resigned during the summer of 1845, to accept a judicial appointment in Georgia; was reelected to fill vacancy caused by his resignation, and took his seat December 8, 1845, thus making his second service in the Senate practically continuous.

[7] Resigned in 1845, having never taken his seat.

[8] Elected to fill vacancy caused by resignation of Washington Poe, who did not qualify, and took his seat January 27, 1846.

[9] Resigned December 24, 1846, "to take effect January 15, 1847, or sooner if successor is elected."

[10] Elected to fill vacancy caused by resignation of Edward D. Baker, and took his seat February 5, 1847.

[11] Admitted as a State into the Union December 28, 1846.

[12] The Senators did not take their seats in this Congress.

[1] Elected to fill vacancy caused by death of John M. Clayton, in preceding Congress, and took his seat March 4, 1857 (special session of the Senate).

[2] Died November 24, 1858.

[3] Elected to fill vacancy caused by death of Thomas L. Harris, and took his seat January 20, 1859.

[4] A protest of certain members of the legislature was presented in the preceding Congress against the legality of the election of both Mr. Fitch and Mr. Bright, setting out "they were not elected by the legislature, but by a convocation of a portion of the members thereof, not authorized by state law, legislative resolution, or Constitutiona provision"; both the Senators were seated upon their credentials, and the credentials and protest were referred to the committee on the Judiciary; the committee reported, May 24, 1858, that the sitting Senators were entitled to their seats, and this report was agreed to June 12, 1858. On January 24, 1859, a memorial of the State of Indiana was presented representing that it was the wish of the state that Henry S. Lane and William M. McCarty be admitted to seats as the only legally-chosen Senators; February 3, 1859, the Senate committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the memorial, reported there was no vacancy in the Setate from the State of Indiana, and that the election of Messrs. Lane and McCarthy was void; the Senate agreed to this report, February 14, 1859.

[5] Died September 7, 1857—before the convening of the Congress.

[6] Elected to fill vacancy caused by death of James Lockhart, and took his seat December 7, 1857.

[7] Died March 29, 1857.

[6] Took his seat July 25, 1868.
[7] The credentials of Thomas A. Hamilton, claiming to be a member-elect from the State at large, were presented; claimant held that, inasmuch as Tennessee had voluntarily emancipated and enfranchised her slaves, she had added to her representative population a sufficient number to give her nine, instead of eight, Representatives and he had been elected as such ninth member. It was the first of many similar claims made by other readmitted States; the majority report was adverse to the claimant and, although the House took no formal action, he was not seated.

[1] Readmitted to representation by act of July 15, 1870.

[2] The credentials of Mr. Hill and Mr. Miller, presented in the Fortieth Congress, and undisposed of on the files of the Senate, were referred again to the Committee on the Judiciary March 9, 1869; they were reported back without recommendation and ordered to lie on the table March 17, 1869; they were again referred to the committee February 14, 1870. A new election was held in Georgia, and on July 15, 1870, the credentials of Richard H. Whiteley and Henry P. Farrow were presented and ordered to lie on the table, but were subsequently referred; on the same day of their presentation the act was approved readmitting Georgia to representation in Congress. The committee reported upon all the credentials January 23, 1871, resolving that Messrs. Hill and Miller were duly elected; that Mr. Hill should be permitted to take his seat, but that Mr. Miller was disqualified by reason of his service in the Confederate Army; this report was adopted February 1, 1871. A joint resolution prescribing a qualification oath for Mr. Miller was approved February 24, 1871; took his seat the same day.

[3] Took his seat under the resolution of February 1, 1871, on that day; term to expire March 3, 1873.

[4] Qualified under the terms of the joint resolution approved February 24, 1871, and took his seat on that date; term to expire March 3, 1871.

[5] Pierce M. B. Young, Nelson Tift, W. P. Edwards, J. W. Clift, Samuel F. Gove, and C. H. Prince presented credentials alleging their election as representatives, April 20, 1868, the same election in which they were elected to the Fortieth Congress; by resolution of January 28, 1870, they were declared not entitled to seats. Pierce M. B. Young subsequently presented credentials under a subsequent election and was seated.

[6] Qualified under act of July 11, 1868, and took his seat January 24, 1871; election unsuccessfully contested by Thomas P. Beard.

[7] Qualified under act of July 11, 1868, and took his seat February 9, 1871.

[8] Qualified under act of July 11, 1868, and took his seat January 16, 1871.

[9] Qualified under act of July 2, 1862, and took his seat January 16, 1871.

[10] Resigned March 6, 1869.

[11] Elected to fill vacancy caused by resignation of Elihu B. Washburne, and took his seat December 6, 1869.

[12] Election unsuccessfully contested by John S. Reid.

[13] Elected to fill vacancy caused by resignation of Daniel D. Pratt, elected Senator, and took his seat March 4, 1869.

[1] Both John Covode and Henry D. Foster claimed to have been elected, while the governor refused to sign a certificate or declare either elected; the House at first refused admission to either; case was recommitted for investigation and on February 9, 1870, the House declared Mr. Foster entitled to the seat; took his seat the same day. Mr. Covode died January 11, 1871.

[2] February 21, 1870, the Committee on Military Affairs presented a report showing he had been "influenced by improper pecuniary considerations in making appointments to the Military and Naval academies," and a resolution for his expulsion; pending action he resigned February 24, 1870; following the announcement, the House adopted a resolution, without a dissenting vote, declaring he had made such appointments in violation of law, that they were influenced by pecuniary considerations, that he was unworthy of a seat in the body, and condemning his conduct. June 18, 1870, credentials of his reelection were presented; on June 21, 1870, the House passed a resolution citing its previous action, declining to allow him to be sworn, and directing the return of his credentials.

[3] Elected to fill vacancy caused by B. Frank Whittemore being refused his seat; took his seat December 12, 1870.

[4] Successfully contested the election of J. P. Reed, and took his seat April 8, 1869; the House had refused to permit Mr. Reed to qualify upon the ground of disloyalty.

[5] Successfully contested the election of William D. Simpson, who was not permitted to qualify on his credentials, and took his seat May 27, 1870.

[6] John B. Rogers claimed a seat as Representative at large, but claim was not seriously considered.

[7] Election unsuccessfully contested by C. A. Sheafe.

[1] Election unsuccessfully contested by David S. Gooding.

[2] May 11, 1872, the Committee on Privileges and Elections was authorized to investigate charges of bribery and corruption in connection with the election of both the sitting Senators; June 3, 1872, it reported that in the case of Mr. Pomeroy such charges were totally unsustained; in the case of Mr. Caldwell the report was directly to the contrary, and on February 17, 1873, it reported a resolution declaring him "not duly and legally elected;" this report was not acted upon during the Congress, but early in the succeeding Congress, and in the special session of the Senate, while the report was pending and under discussion, Mr. Caldwell resigned (March 24, 1873).

[3] Died September 22, 1872.

[4] Appointed to fill vacancy caused by death of Garrett Davis, and took his seat December 2, 1872.

[5] Resigned November 1, 1872; January 22, 1873, credentials of John Ray and William L. McMillen, each claiming to have been elected to fill the vacancy, were presented and referred; February 20, 1873, the committee reported that neither of the claimants was entitled to a seat, as no state government existed at the time in Louisiana, and recommended the passage of a bill ordering a new election; such a bill was rejected February 27, 1873; no further action was taken on the credentials and the seat remained vacant to the close of the session.

[6] Elected to fill vacancy caused by death of James McCleery, November 5, 1871, before the convening of Congress, and took his seat December 3, 1872. Resigned March 3, 1873.

[1] Joseph C. Abbott was a claimant for this seat; the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported February 28, 1872, that Zebulon B. Vance had received "a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house," and Mr. Abbott received the next highest number of votes; the next day Mr. Vance was declared duly elected. Mr. Abbott rested his claim on what he assumed to be the legal result of the conceded ineligibility of Mr. Vance, who was barred by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment; Mr. Vance made no claim to the seat; on February 5, 1872, credentials of Mr. Ransom were presented, certifying he had been elected January 30, 1872, "to fill a vacancy existing by reason of the resignation of Zebulon B. Vance"; April 23, 1872, Senate declared, by resolution, that Mr. Abbott had not been elected, and the day following that Mr. Ransom was declared entitled to the seat; took his seat April 24, 1872; resolutions were subsequently adopted allowing mileage and salary to Mr. Abbott from March 4, 1871, to April 23, 1872, and fixing Mr. Ransom's term and pay as beginning March 4, 1871.

[1] This seat was claimed by Henry M. Spofford; March 5, 1877 (in the special session of the Senate), Mr. Kellogg presented himself to be sworn, but objection was made and his credentials were ordered to lie on the table; October 17, 1877, the credentials of Mr. Spofford were presented and they, with the credentials of Mr. Kellogg, were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; November 26, 1877, the committee reported in favor of Mr. Kellogg; the report was adopted November 30, 1877; took his seat the same day. In the succeeding Congress the case was reopened upon petition of Mr. Spofford and a report was made in his favor, but he died August 20, 1880, before action was taken.

[2] In the preceding Congress the Committee on Privileges and Elections twice reported that Pinckney B. S. Pinchback was entitled to the seat upon credentials presented from two elections; the committee, after these decisions, was instructed to pass upon credentials of James B. Eustis and held that, inasmuch as Mr. Pinchback had a clear title, there was no vacancy; the Senate refused to adopt the report of the committee and declared Mr. Pinchback "not entitled to the seat" by a vote of 32 to 29. March 9, 1877 (in the special session of the Senate), the credentials of Mr. Eustis were taken from the files and again referred; the committee reported December 1, 1877, holding that the Senate's action in the case of Mr. Pinchback was a final adjudication, and a resolution declaring Mr. Eustis entitled to his seat, his term of service to date from January 12, 1876; this report and resolution were adopted December 10, 1877, and Mr. Eustis appeared, qualified, and took his seat the same day.

[3] Election unsuccessfully contested by Chester B. Darrall.

[4] Election unsuccessfully contested by George S. Smith.

[5] Died March 15, 1878.

[6] Elected to fill vacancy caused by death of John E. Leonard and took his seat December 2, 1878.

[1] The legislature of West Virginia had met and adjourned without electing a Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1887; on March 5, 1887, the Governor appointed Daniel B. Lucas to fill such vacancy; on the same day he issued a proclamation calling the legislature in extraordinary session for eight specific purposes, the election of Senator not being named as one of them; immediately it had assembled, the legislature proceeded to elect a Senator, and Charles J. Faulkner was chosen; credentials of both were presented December 5, 1887, and Mr. Faulkner appeared to be sworn; objection was made and he was not permitted to qualify; December 14, 1887, the Senate adopted a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom all papers were referred on the 12th, declaring Mr. Faulkner duly elected and entitled to the seat; appeared, qualified, and took his seat the same day.

Adair, John Alfred McDowell, a Representative from Indiana; born in Jay county, Ind., December 22, 1863; removed to Portland, Ind., in 1880; attended the high school; engaged in business; elected clerk of the city of Portland in 1888; clerk of Jay county in 1890; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1895; elected representative to the general assembly of Indiana in 1902; engaged in the banking business; elected as a Democrat to the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses (March 4, 1907–March 3, 1911.) Reelected to the Sixty-second Congress.

Adams, Andrew, a Delegate from Connecticut; born in Stamford, Conn., January 7, 1736; was graduated from Yale in 1760; studied law and was admitted to the Fairfield county bar, where his remarkable career as a jurist began; removed to Litchfield, which thereafter remained his home; member of the state legislature 1776–1781; Delegate in the First and Second Continental Congresses 1777–1780; member of the executive council in 1789, and in 1793 was appointed chief justice, and filled this position until his death in Litchfield, Conn., November 26, 1797.

Adams, Benjamin, a Representative from Massachusetts; born in Mendon, Mass., December 16, 1764; was graduated from Brown university in 1788; studied law, was admitted to the bar, and began practice in Uxbridge; member of the state house of representatives 1809–1814 and of the state senate 1814–1815, and 1822–1825; elected as a Federalist to the Fourteenth Congress, to fill vacancy caused by the death of Elijah Brigham; reelected to the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Congresses, and served from December 2, 1816, to March 3, 1821; defeated as the Federal candidate for the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Congresses; died in Uxbridge, Mass., March 28, 1837.

Adams, Charles Francis, a Representative from Massachusetts; born in Boston, Mass., August 18, 1807. His father being appointed to St. Petersburg, the boy's life was spent until he was ten years of age in that capital, when his parents returned to the United States, and Charles Francis entered the Boston latin school; and then Harvard, and was graduated in 1825; studied law in the office of Daniel Webster, and was admitted to the Suffolk county bar in 1828; elected to the state house of representatives in 1831 and to the state senate in 1835, and served five years; founded the Boston Whig in May, 1846, as an organ to express the views of himself, Stephen C. Phillips, John G. Palfrey, Charles Sumner, and Henry Wilson; was nominated by the Free-Soil party for Vice President with Martin Van Buren as President in 1848; elected to the Thirty-sixth Congress (March 4, 1859–March 3, 1861); appointed by President Lincoln to the Court of St. James; arrived in England the day after the proclamation of neutrality, but to his keen diplomacy is due, beyond doubt, that more serious trouble did not arise out of the "Trent affair." His handling of Lord Palmerston's note regarding General Butler's order No. 28 raised him to the first rank of statesmen; the retention of the rams, accomplished only at the last moment, and that led to the Geneva conference, in which England indemnified the United States for the damages of the Alabama, is credited to his diplomacy; declined the presidency of Harvard college, but was made one of the overseers in 1869; died in Boston, November 21, 1886.

Adams, Charles H., a Representative from New York; born in Coxsackie, N. Y., in 1824; studied law, was admitted to the bar, and practiced; moved to Cohoes, N. Y., in 1850 and engaged in manufacturing; retired from active business in 1870; elected in 1870 the first mayor of Cohoes, and served two years; member of the state assembly in 1858 and of the state senate 1872–1873; delegate in the Republican national convention of 1872; United States commissioner from New York to the Vienna exposition in 1873; elected as a Republican to the Forty-fourth Congress (March 4, 1875–March 3, 1877); died in New York City, December 15, 1902.

Adams, George Everett, a Representative from Illinois; born in Keene, N. H., June 18, 1840; moved with parents to Chicago, Ill., in 1853; was graduated from Harvard in 1860; studied law at the Dane law school, Cambridge, Mass., was admitted to the bar in 1865, and afterwards practiced in Chicago; elected to the state senate from the sixth district in November, 1880; resigned on the 3d of March, 1883; elected as a Republican to the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses (March 4, 1883–March 3, 1891); resumed the practice of law in Chicago, Ill.

Adams, George M., a Representative from Kentucky; born in Barbourville, Knox county, Ky., December 20, 1837; attended Center college, Danville, Ky.; studied law, and was admitted to the bar; clerk of the circuit court of Knox county, Ky., 1859–1861; in August, 1861, raised a company and entered the Union army; captain and paymaster of volunteers until the close of the war; elected as a Democrat to the Fortieth, Forty-first, Forty-second, and Forty-third Congresses (March 4, 1867–March 3, 1875); elected clerk of the national House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress, December 6, 1875, and served until the close of the Forty-sixth Congress; resumed the practice of law in Barbourville, Ky.

Adams, Green, a Representative from Kentucky; born in Barbourville, Ky., August 20, 1812; studied law, was admitted to the bar, and practiced; member of the state legislature in 1839; elected as a Whig to the Thirtieth Congress (March 4, 1847–March 3, 1849); presidential elector 1844 and 1856; judge of the circuit court of Kentucky 1851–1856; elected as a National American to the Thirty-sixth Congress (March 4, 1859–March 3, 1861); sixth auditor of the treasury from April 17, 1861, to October 26, 1864; chief clerk of the national House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress; died in Philadelphia, Pa., January 18, 1884.

Adams, Henry Cullen, a Representative from Wisconsin; born in Verona, Oneida county, N. Y., November 28, 1850; removed to Wisconsin in 1851; attended Albion academy one year, and the University of Wisconsin three years; member of the Wisconsin assembly 1883–1887; state superintendent of public property 1884–1890; dairy and food commissioner of Wisconsin 1894–1902; elected as a Republican to the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses and served from March 4, 1903, until his death in Madison, Wis., July 9, 1906.

Adams, John, a Delegate from Massachusetts; born in Braintree, Mass., October 30, 1735; was graduated from Harvard college in 1755; studied law and was admitted to the Suffolk county bar in 1758; joined the Sons of Liberty and appeared before Governor Hutchinson, with Otis and Gridley, to argue against the stamp act; was elected to represent Boston, to which city he had removed, in the general court in 1768; elected to the First Continental Congress; signed the Declaration of Independence and proposed George Washington, of Virginia, for general of the American army. He became head of the war department, but resigned and was appointed commissioner, superseding Deane, with Franklin and Arthur Lee, to the Court of France. He was later made minister plenipotentiary to Holland, to negotiate a loan in 1782; obtained the loan and negotiated a treaty of amity and commerce; was the first accredited minister to England in 1785, where he remained three years; returned to the United States in April, 1788; served as Vice President of the United States 1789–1797, with Washington as President; elected President of the United States as a member of the Federalist party and served 1797–1801; his last act in office was to appoint John Marshall chief justice of the supreme court of the United States. At the age of 85 he acted as a delegate in the constitutional convention of Massachusetts; died in Quincy, Mass., July 4, 1826.
